Her hand lay^{id} palm down on the tablecloth, relaxed. It was tan, smooth, and soft for a lady of her age. The nails painted ~~I'm Not Really a Waitress red~~^[CRH1], which was silly; no one would ever mistake this hand as ~~one~~-belonging to ~~(waitress)~~^[CRH2], even a former one, but the irony was lost one everyone but the mind of God. She had been a waitress, once.

The hand picked up the cup ~~of t~~Tea ~~in the cup~~ next to it and she sipped without tasting it, thinking about Tuesday. Not the deliciously greasy breakfast, or the grisly scene during their drive, but about Amos himself. He'd been so affectionate and spontaneous, like she's never seen him. How long's it been since we made love in the morning? ~~h~~He'd asked when they awoke. Too long! ~~s~~She'd answered, strangely unaffected by his fetid morning breath, surprising them both. They had rolled around on the sun-lit sheets until almost 8:00 ~~A~~Mam and ~~stopping and~~breaking^[CRH3] their routine of missionary position they'd maintained for the past ~~ten~~10 or so years. Then he'd pranced around in her hideous yellow dressing gown, not bothering to even close the curtains! Was that only two days ago?! Tears formed, held in place by thick waterproof
